Market Update

The ASX200 lifted 4% for the month of February. Sector dynamics drove the divergence, with Financials and Materials within the S&P/ASX 200 each climbing close to 9%. In contrast, Health Care fell sharply and Information Technology remained under pressure, now significantly below its July 2025 peak amid concerns around AI disruption.

The ASX 20 advanced about 8%, while smaller companies lagged and both the ASX Small Ordinaries and NZX SmallCap indices declined.

South Korea led regional markets once again, with the Korea BMI advancing roughly 20% for the month and around 52% year-to-date.

U.S. equities faced headwinds in February, as heightened scrutiny around AI-related capital spending and its implications for corporate profitability weighed on large-cap technology companies. The S&P 500 recorded its third weekly decline.

Sector performance among large caps was uneven, reflecting a pullback in enthusiasm for major technology companies and a move toward more defensive positioning. Utilities delivered the strongest gains, while Communication Services and Consumer Discretionary sectors declined.

Factor strategies largely produced positive results, with quality, dividend and low-volatility approaches outperforming. Value-oriented strategies also exceeded growth-focused approaches during the month.

In Europe, most sectors delivered positive returns, with Communication Services and Real Estate producing particularly strong gains, while Financials was the only sector to decline during the month.

Australian 10-year government bond yields eased to 4.29%, while expectations for domestic monetary easing expected later in 2026.

U.S. 10-year Treasury yields declined to 4.21%, with interest rate markets increasingly assigning a greater probability to a third Federal Reserve rate reduction later in the year.

Recent escalation in the Middle East has increased geopolitical uncertainty and reintroduced energy supply risk into market pricing. Investors are assessing whether higher oil prices could reignite inflation, slow growth, or both.

We maintain, meaningful exposure to global infrastructure, structural allocation to energy stocks, dedicated gold allocation, high-quality fixed income, active currency hedging.
